OW2 and XWiki Announce First Release of XWiki Workspaces

The OW2 community announces the first version of XWiki Workspaces, an easy-to-use, easy-to-deploy enterprise 2.0 collaboration tool supported by OW2 member XWiki.

San Francisco- May 6, 2008 – OW2 and XWiki are joining their voices to announce the launch of XWiki Workspaces, an easy-to-use Open-Source enterprise collaboration solution. XWiki Workspaces provides enterprises with an effective way to create new spaces full-featured with a blog, a wiki, a file manager and an image gallery.

Web 2.0 collaboration practices are changing the workplace. XWiki, one of the leading enterprise-wiki providers, is at the heart of this revolution. As companies increasingly understand and embrace the benefits stemming from better communication, openness and engagement with their community, new tools are required to support their initiatives.

XWiki was created with the aim of providing enterprise-grade wiki solutions from its start. XWiki solutions feature the ability to develop full-fledged collaboration applications built right on top of the wiki stack within days. They integrate seamlessly with existing Active Directory configurations and work on top of most databases. XWiki Solutions are delivered through a Professional Open-Source model offering the best of both worlds : no vendor lock-in, no license fees - but professional support and development services.

XWiki and OW2 are announcing the first release of XWiki Workspaces, an easy-to-use collaboration solution. Users can create new workspaces in seconds, featuring its own blog, wiki, image gallery and file folder. Users can share information, follow new items on their personal dashboard and check the company's directory to find out more about anyone in the organization.

XWiki will be demonstrating XWiki Workspaces and presenting the XWiki solution range during JavaOne 2008 in San Francisco from May 6-9, on the OW2 Village, booth 212.
